He and his wife Christiana were active in the African American abolitionist community in Boston. Bannister won the first prize for his art at the 1876 Philadelphia Centenary Exhibition and was a founding member of the Providence Art Club and Rhode Island School of Design. His style and pastoral subjects were influenced by the mile Jean-François and the French Barbizon School. He also looked at the sea as inspiration for its often experimental and idealistic use of color and atmosphere. He worked as a photographer and portraitist before moving to the landscapes. His style fell into disgrace later in his life; He and Christiana moved from College Hill to Providence in Boston and then a smaller house in Providence. He was neglected after his death in 1901, until the National Museum of African Art and others returned him to national attention in the 1960s and 1970s.
